There are many websites on various subjects that can be very helpful in finding what you need when you need it, but sometimes these sites aren't available or they don't have what you're looking for. We'll list some of our favorite websites here—the best educational resources, no matter what subject you're trying to learn—so that everyone will have quick access to some new knowledge. You can also access these sites by going to Yahoo! and using the search engine to type in the name of your subject. Then read what you find, and decide if it's something you want to pursue further. 1. <http://www.safehaven.com/content/recourses/shc/index.htm> This is a free one-stop-shop for researching different topics that includes a lot of information on government agencies, businesses, and industries as well as articles from newspapers and magazines that will give you an idea of what's happening in the world right now. 2. <http://www.howstuffworks.com/> This is a good starting point for research on pretty much anything you can imagine, including science, technology, medicine, the military, and more. 3. <http://encyclopedia.thefreedictionary.com/encyclopedia> This is also a good starting point for researching different topics, similar to Safe Haven above, but with a focus on history and current events in news articles from The New York Times newspaper. 4. https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Educational_reference This is our favorite site. It will give you a quick glimpse of all the things that are happening in the world, and will also tell you what's going on in some specific areas of study. If you want to be more thorough, use this link to Wikipedia. 5. <http://www.w3schools.com/> This is a good site if, like us, you've been wondering about a particular topic and can't find any resources about it on the Internet yet. It's great for research because it gives you definitions of words from different languages and shows their similarities and differences side by side so that you know exactly what they mean. 6. <http://www.mid.org/> This is another great site for finding lots of information about music, especially classical music. The music examples there are played by an orchestra, but you can also download the files and play them on your computer (or your MP3 player). You can even create your own piece of classical music by choosing pieces from different sections of the website. 7. <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Metacritic> This site shows the Metacritic scores of movies and TV shows, giving you a good idea what people thought about them before they went to see or watch them at home.
